77. Note: "Segregation refers to the practice of separating vulnerable individuals or those who have been deemed dangerous to themselves or others from the general population in a prison or detention facility. Segregation takes different forms in different facilities, but is most commonly a designated housing unit that is separate from the general population." Administrative segregation is used when a detainee is at risk of harming himself or others or for those who need "protective custody" or who have certain medical conditions. Disciplinary segregation is used for detainees who break facility rules. Solitary confinement can be used in either case. For more information: National Immigrant Justice Center.
